

One Thousand and One Nights

VOLUME 1

BOUBALÉ

Once upon a time, King Shahryar, wounded by love, vowed never to trust again. Each night, he would marry a woman... and have her executed at dawn.

Scheherazade, daughter of the grand vizier, asked to become his wife. Not to die, but to end the madness. To survive, she opened a new world to the king each night.

In the dim light of the royal chamber, her stories became ships, oases, tempests. From the sands of Arabia to sunken cities, her words wove a spell against the darkness.

This menu draws from her spirit, where each cocktail tells its own tale. To open it is to turn the first page of an endless night, for what you hold is no mere menu, it is the first chapter of an endless night. And perhaps, as you set down your glass, you'll still hear Scheherazade's voice whispering...

"LET ME TELL YOU ANOTHER."

The Story of the Merchant and the Jinni

A merchant, resting beneath a tree, casts the pits of his dates and unknowingly strikes down the invisible son of a jinn. The spirit appears, demanding blood for blood. Granted one year to return and bid his farewells, the merchant comes back to meet his fate. But as the jinn raises his hand, three elders show up, each with a strange tale. Their stories soften the jinn's heart, and vengeance fades into wonder.

The Story of the Second Calendar, Son of a King

Son of a Yemenite king, cast ashore in distant India, the second Calendar becomes a woodcutter. Beneath the forest roots, a hidden trapdoor led him to a buried palace, where the princess of the Ebony Isles languished, held captive by an Ifrit. Love and drunkenness broke an ancient spell, fire rose and blood was spilled. He emerged scarred, one-eyed, cloaked in silence, wandering without name or kingdom.

The First Voyage of Sindbad the Sailor

A peaceful island, vast and lush, offers rest to weary sailors. But the ground is warm, too warm and starts breathing. The fire flickers, trees tremble, the ground tremors. It is no island, but a sea beast, ancient and colossal. It vanishes into the depths. The ship sinks, the men with it. Only Sindbad drifts on, carried towards the unknown.

The Story of the Princes Amjad and Assad

Two princes, born of different queens, grew up as brothers, bound by love stronger than blood. Yet envy stirs behind palace walls. A lie slithers in and the bond is broken. One is exiled by his father, the other captured by strangers. Across deserts and cities, their paths cross in disguise.

Blades are drawn before truth uncovers.
What treachery divides, destiny shall slowly restore.

The Tale of the City of Brass

A city of bronze rests in the heart of the desert, its gates sealed, its silence unbroken. No smoke, no voices, only statues of men frozen mid-breath, wide-eyed with terror. Those who enter find no livings, only echoes and dust. But deeper still lies a tablet, etched with warnings in ancient languages. This was once a kingdom of might and pride, now fallen to forces older than kings. A curse lingers, and few return unchanged.

The Story of the Two Sisters Who Envyed Their Cadette

A queen is disowned by her jealous sisters, her children stolen and scattered. Years pass. In a far-off land, three young travellers look for the substance of legends: a bird that speaks, a tree that sings, and water of gold. Each treasure speaks of more than beauty, they reveal truths forsaken through betrayal. As nature wakes, the past surfaces, and the silence that concealed the queen's sorrow finally shatters.
